It may be that all baseball history is to be reversed and that the Red Sox may be able to upset the club that is today breezing merrily along toward another championship. But there is no real justification for such a feeling. Boston has won the last three games from the Mackmen machine, but that recens little considering the command. Batted for eans little considering the command-means little considering the commanding lead which the Athletics have obtained through their spurt after a rather disastrous month in June.

The last time the Nationals were in Philadelphia the Athletics looked like the best ball club the writer has ever seen since the days of the real Chicago Cubs, who mowed down the Detroit Tigers in the world's series. Who says that baseball cannot compete with the European war in a contest for public interest?

In four National League cities the fans have been blocking the streets in which scoreboards are displayed, and in Boston the police had to open a way for traffic in front of two newspaper offices. I never saw such mobs as collected in the City of Culture when we were there. The fans were fairly frantic and if you had asked anybody what was going on in the war, he would have looked up at you blankly and asked. "What war?"

This Speaker could have hit four home runs in an inning and nobody would have noticed it. It would be a great taing for baseball if Boston won the National League pennant, and I believe that the world's series attendance would break all records for the average number of paid admissions per game.
